Roustabouts in the oil and gas industry have many responsibilities, including: Safety Roustabouts are responsible for following safety guidelines and regulations, and ensuring work areas are clean and safe. They may also be involved in spill response and cleanup. Equipment Roustabouts may assemble, repair, or dismantle oilfield equipment, and may also inspect equipment to ensure it's functioning properly. Supplies and materials Roustabouts may load and unload supplies and equipment, and may also assist in transporting loads. Communication Roustabouts communicate with other employees and ensure they have the materials and equipment they need. Emergencies Roustabouts may be responsible for responding to emergencies, such as stopping a job on a catwalk in case of a disaster. Physical Demands The job requires physical strength and stamina, as roustabouts frequently lift heavy objects, climb ladders and scaffolds, and perform physically demanding tasks. This physical strain can take a toll on their bodies over time. Rotational Work Many roustabouts work on a rotational schedule, which consists of long periods of continuous work followed by times of rest. While this schedule allows for more vacation time, it can also disturb typical sleep habits and cause inconsistent routines. Lack of Privacy Living and working in close quarters with coworkers on offshore drilling platforms or distant sites can result in a lack of personal space and privacy, which can be difficult for some people.
