A rig roustabout is an entry-level manual laborer on an oil or gas rig who performs general maintenance, cleaning, and support tasks. Their duties include cleaning the rig, handling and moving equipment, assisting crane operators, and performing basic repairs to ensure the safety and efficiency of operations. This physically demanding role is crucial for daily upkeep, provides on-the Rig maintenance and cleaning: Keeping the rig and its equipment clean and organized. Cleaning up spills and maintaining clear walkways. Disposing of waste properly. Cleaning and maintaining equipment, including painting. Equipment and material handling: Loading and unloading supplies and equipment, often by connecting/disconnecting crane slings. Moving heavy materials and equipment. Assembling and disassembling drilling equipment. Operational support: Assisting crane operators and other crew members with their tasks. Performing basic repairs on machinery. Helping with the setup and dismantling of rigs. Safety and compliance: Following all safety protocols and regulations. Ensuring fire exits and equipment are clear. Participating in safety drills. Work environment Physically demanding: The job requires significant physical exertion and the ability to work in potentially hazardous conditions. Long shifts: Roustabouts often work long shifts (e.g., 12-hour shifts) and may live on-site for several weeks at a time before having time off. Location: Work can be on offshore platforms or land-based rigs, often in remote locations. Career path Entry-level: Roustabout is a common entry-level position for those new to the oil and gas industry. On-the-job training: It provides hands-on experience that prepares workers for more advanced roles. Advancement: With experience and training, roustabouts can be promoted to positions like roughneck (or floorhand), which involves more direct drilling operations, or even crane operator.
